

Hi!

Thank you for downloading the instructions for a simple, but beautiful, sachet from victorian-embroidery-and-crafts.com.

Refined Victorian women had preference for faint aromas rather than for strong scents which made novel shapes in sachet cases for holding the delicate powder eagerly sought for, and ladies who had many of these pretty trifles always desired more. The following illustrates and explains such a pretty sachet.

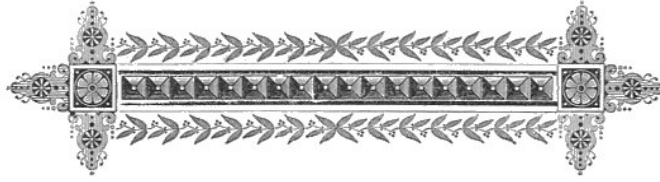

I hope you enjoy this sachet pattern. The embroidery designs are also included. If embroidery is not desired, a stamped image or appliqué work would also make for suitable decoration. Don't forget to check back often to see what new items have been added to the site!

Warmly,

Mary

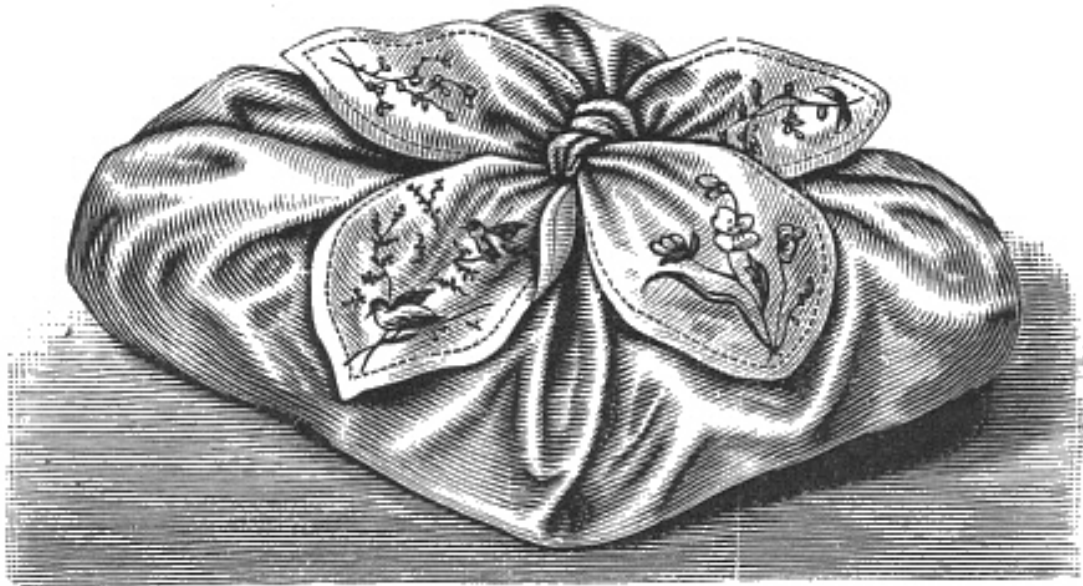

PS - If you decide to make this Victorian sachet, following these directions (with some creative license, of course), and would like to share the results of your work with other Victorian lovers, please contact me and I will post it on the website. Add your own notes and thoughts on the project that could help others who may want to make this item. Let the world see your masterpiece!

A Simple and Beautiful Sachet.

A plain India silk hand-kerchief or a square of India silk hemmed at the edges may be used for this exhaler of delightful odors. The sachet is filled with cotton well-sprinkled with perfume powder, and tied together as pictured, the ends being spread out and each decorated with a different design done in Kensington outline or satin stitch in suitable colors. The correct sizes for the designs are given at Figures Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. The handkerchief or silk may be of any preferred color.

Embroidery Designs for Sachet.

FIGURES Nos. 6, 7, 8 AND 9. — These designs are the proper size for the sachet pictured above, and may be done in satin stitch, solid Kensington or outline stitch, or they may be painted, as preferred. The designs are also handsome for decorating other articles, such as mouchoir (handkerchief) and glove cases, scarves, tidies, etc.
